animal; a bird. It is colloquially used of edible birds, but in books of all the feathered tribes.
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males subjects, and at their controuls. Shakesp.
Lucullus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, this is a marvellous house for the Summer; but methinks very cold for Winter. Lucullus answered, do you not think me as wife as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the Winter season. Bacon's Apophthegms.
This mighty breath
Instructs the fowls of heaven. Thomson's Spring.
TO FOWL. v. n. [from the noun.] To kill birds for food or game.
FO'WLER. n. f. [from fowl.] A sportsman who pursues birds.
The fowler, warn'd
By those good omens, with swift early steps
Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields and glades, Offensive to the birds. Phillips.

FRA

With slaughter'ing guns th' unweary'd fowler roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves. Pope.
FO'WLINGPIECE. n. f. [fowl and piece.] A gun for birds.
'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good *fowl*ingpiece, to destroy and scare them away. Mortimer.

1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears and a bushy tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes, and preying upon fowls or small animals.
The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb. Shaksp.
He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.
2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.
FOXCASE. n. f. [fox and case.] A fox's skin.
One had better be laughed at for taking a foxcase for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a case. L'Estrange.
FOXCHASE. n. f. [fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.
See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a foxchase, wife at a debate. Pope's Epistle i.
FOXEVIL. n. f. [fox and evil.] A kind of disease in which the hair sheds.
FOXGLOVES. n. f. A plant.
The leaves are produced alternately on the branches: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into six ample long segments: the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulose and compressed, and a little reflexed at the brim:
these flowers are disposed in a long spike, and always grow upon one side of the stalk: the ovary of the flower becomes a roundish fruit, which ends in a point, and opens in the middle: it has two cells, in which many small seeds are contained. Miller.
FOXHUNTER. n. f. [fox and hunter.] A man whose chief ambition is to shew his bravery in hunting foxes. A term of reproach used of country gentlemen.
The foxhunters went their way, and then out steals the fox. L'Estrange, Fable 104.
John Wildfire, foxhunter, broke his neck over a six-bar gate. Spectator, No. 561.
FOXSHIP. n. f. [from fox.] The character or qualities of a fox; cunning; mischievous art.

And of them both did foy and tribute raise. Fairy Queen.
TO FRACT. v. a. [fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.
His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.
FRACTION. n. f. [fraction, Fr. fractio, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.
It hath been observed by several, that the surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; but more particularly several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. A broken part of an integral.
Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, con-sisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.
Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbutnot on Coins.
FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number.
We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Cocker's Arithmetick.
FRACTURE. n. f. [fractura, Latin.]
1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.
That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.
But thou wilt fin and grief destroy,
That to the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-let song,
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong. Herbert.
Fractures

FRA

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp's Surgery.
TO FRACTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.
The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wise's Surgery.
FRAGILE. adj. [fragile, French; fragilis, Latin.]
1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.
To ease them of their griefs,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage. Shakespeare's Timon.
The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon's N. Hist.
When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,
'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Denham.
A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glauv.
2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.
Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,
Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou'st set. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
FRAGILITY. n. f. [from fragile.]
1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.
To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoat bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon's N. Hist.
2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.
Fearing the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune. Kneller's History.
3. Frailty; lability to fault.
All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Watson.
FRAGMENT. n. f. [fragmentum, Latin.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.
He who late a sceptre did command,
Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand. Dryden.
Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davids, has shewn us this way to improvement. Watts's Improvement.
If a thinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.
FRA'GMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.
She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this,
What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;
He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Donne.
FRAGOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash.
Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before
The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sandys.
FRAGRANCE. n. f. [fragrantia, Lat.] Sweetness of smell; FRAGRANCY. n. f. [from fragrance.] Sweetness of smell;
pleasing scent; grateful odour.
Eve separate he spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where the flood Half-spy'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator, No. 47.
Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.
Such was the wine; to quench whole fervent steam Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd; the goblet crown'd, Breath'd aromatic fragrancies around. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.
FRAGRANT. adj. [fragrans, Latin.] Odorous; sweet of smell.
The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent, less fragrant than her breath. Prior.
FRA'GRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.
As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FRAIL. n. f.
1. A basket made of rushes.
2. A rush for weaving baskets.
FRAIL. adj. [fragilis, Latin.]
1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.
I know my body's of so frail a kind,
As force without, fevers within can kill.
When with care we have rais'd this imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers's Sermon 5.
2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.
The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may I.

FRA

these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fail in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
FRA'ILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; infirmity.
There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.
FRA'ILITY. n. f. [from frail.]
1. Weakness of resolution; infirmity of mind; infirmity.
Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shak.
Nor shouldst thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel. Milton's Agonies.
God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.
2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity.
Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the mule. Dryden.
Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.
FRAISCHUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.
Hither in Summer-ev'nings you repair,
To taste the fraischur of the purer air. Dryden.
FRAISE. n. f. [French, the caul of an animal.] A pancake with bacon in it.
TO FRAME. v. a.
1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.
The double gates he findeth locked fast;
The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.
2. To fit one to another.
They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do other such necessities to their convenient use, than to fight.
Abbot's Description of the World.
Hew the timber, saw it out, frame it, and let it together.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. To make; to compose.
Then chusing out few words most horrible,
Thereof did verses frame. Spenser.
Fight valiantly to-day;
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakesp.
4. To regulate; to adjust.
Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.
5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.
Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shaksp. H. VI.
6. To form and digest by thought.
The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them. Locke.
Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddesses by your matchless charms. Granv.
Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies;
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope's Odyssey.
How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years? Watts.
7. To contrive; to plan.
Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon, b. viii.
8. To settle; to scheme out.
Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.
Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles. Bacon.
FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A fabric; any thing constructed of various parts or members.
If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.
Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.
These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.
